

RACE PRESS PHOTO CAPTIONS

Child & Guardian: A resource center at the heart of the exhibit welcomes small children with books, games and other activities. Credit: (Photo) courtesy of American Anthropological Association and Science Museum of Minnesota

Family Participation: Together, a family discovers that assumptions can be misleading as they listen to voices and try to match them with pictures of the speakers. Credit: (Photo) courtesy of American Anthropological Association and Science Museum of Minnesota

Hands-on Interactive: An interactive game about the traits people share yields surprising results that challenge visitors to reconsider the ways in which they categorize people. Credit: (Photo) courtesy of American Anthropological Association and Science Museum of Minnesota

Self-Identification: "What are you?" asks artist Kip in his photographic installation, The Hapa Project. As they encounter a multiplicity of answers, visitors reflect on the sharp contrast between common conceptions of race and the fluidity of personal identity. Credit: (Photo) courtesy of American Anthropological Association and Science Museum of Minnesota